The new boarder, whose name is not at present known, noticed the remark and responded that she had discovered something familiar in the visitor's voice. When quite small, the girl had left home and had but a faint remembrance of her people, but she had remembered through all her wanderings that her brother had his name tatoord upon his arm, and after the sound of the familiar voice and the discovery of resemblance in features, she asked him in some fear to roll up his sleeve. The visitor obeyed in surprise at the strange request, and the tatoo marks stood revealed. Ve the sobbing cry, the girl threw herself upon the voung man's neck and told him that he was her brother. The man, in turn, was aimost petrified with horror at the situation in which he found himself and the crime hew: s about to commit, and the two sobbed their sorrow out upon each other's bosoms.
